

BLOG CAROUSEL ONE CLICK

Wrong orders don't start at the stove.

They start on a paper chit nobody can read.

Every RUSH HOUR, the same relay:

customer tells the waiter,
waiter tells the biller,
biller shouts to the kitchen.

One missed step, and table 12 gets the wrong dish.

THE FIX IS A SCREEN IN THE KITCHEN—A KDS.

BEFORE

VS

The biller punches the order once. It shows up with the table number, the items, the add-ons, the special requests. No runner. No paper.

WHAT THE SCREEN ACTUALLY FIXES:

1. Order changes reach the kitchen instantly — no relay.

2. Same dish from three tables groups together — prepped in one go.

3. Prep time shows for every dish — the floor answers customers straight.

4. Day-end, count KOTs against orders delivered — wastage and theft have nowhere to hide.

One kitchen screen. Zero missed orders.

The KDS module in Petpooja POSS — the system behind 1,00,000+ outlets.

Send this to whoever still runs the kitchen on paper chits.

Your customer at table 12 has been waiting twenty minutes.

He asks the waiter where his food is.

The waiter gives the same line — “coming, five minutes.”

He isn't lying. He genuinely doesn't know.

The slow part of your service isn't the waiter.

It's the walk to the billing counter.

On paper chits, one table takes roughly 9.5 minutes

On a captain's tablet: about 3 minutes

The captain taps the order at the table.

The KOT reaches the kitchen in under 5 seconds — split by station,

so the biryani hits the tandoor printer and the mojito hits the bar.

Even the bill settles at the table.

In the 7:30–9:30 rush, a single waiter might handle 12–15 tables.

And close to 6 out of 10 operators are short-staffed — NRAI's 2024 report.

Picture a 50-cover place in Vastrapur with three waiters instead of five.

Paper chits crack there.

A full evening: 80 tables,

6 minutes saved per table —

the floor reclaims close to 8 hours of staff time every night.

Across 1,00,000+ restaurants on Petpooja, outlets that switch see kitchen order returns drop within two weeks.

One Android tablet. Six minutes back per table.

That's the Captain App in Petpooja POSS — running in a day.
